

Bereavement

Who we are

Age Scotland is the national charity for older people. We work to improve the lives of everyone over the age of 50 so that they can love later life.

Our vision is a Scotland where everyone can love later life.

Our mission is to inspire, involve and empower older people in Scotland, and influence others, so that people can make the most of later life.

Our three strategic aims are to:

Help older people to be as well as they can be

Promote a positive view of ageing and later life

Tackle loneliness and isolation

How we can help

We know that growing older doesn't come with a manual. Later life can bring changes and opportunities to your life and you may need to know about rights, organisations and services which are unfamiliar to you.

That's why we provide free information and advice to help you on a range of topics including benefits and entitlements, social care, legal issues such as Power of Attorney, housing and much more. All of our guides are available to download for free from our website, or you can contact our helpline team to have copies posted to you for free.

The Age Scotland helpline is a free, confidential phone service for older people, their carers and families in Scotland looking for information and advice.

Later life can bring times when you just need someone to talk to. Our friendship line is part of our wider helpline and older people can call us for a chat. We're here to listen, provide friendship and offer support.

For information, advice and friendship

Call us free on: 0800 12 44 222
(Monday – Friday, 9am - 5pm)

Visit agescotland.org.uk
to find out more.

Contents

What this guide is about	p1
Practical things to sort out	p2
Coping with a bereavement	p2
Dealing with grief	p3
How you might be feeling	p4
Looking after yourself	p6
Past bereavements	p7
Those around you	p8
If your spouse, partner or civil partner has died	p9
Looking ahead	p11
Useful organisations	p12

Disclaimer

This information guide has been prepared by Age Scotland and contains general advice only, it should not be relied on as a basis for any decision or action and cannot be used as a substitute for professional advice. Neither Age Scotland nor any of its subsidiary companies or charities accepts any liability arising from its use and it is the reader's sole responsibility to ensure any information is up to date and accurate. Please note that the inclusion of named agencies, websites, companies, products, services or publications in this information guide does not constitute a recommendation or endorsement by Age Scotland or any of its subsidiary companies or charities

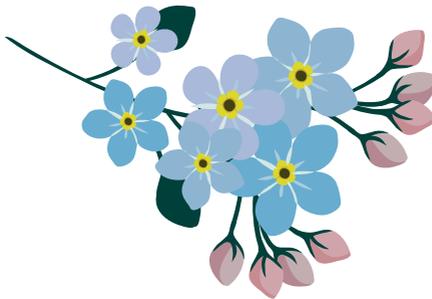

What this guide is about

The death of someone close to you can be one of the hardest things you ever have to deal with. It is not something you can be good or bad at, you just have to deal with it as best you can.

How you deal with death is very personal and there is no formula. However, this guide can explain:

- practical things to sort out
- how you might be feeling
- why you might be feeling this way and
- some of the things that could help you now and in the future.

You may not want to read this guide now and could decide to come back to it at a different time. You may also want to look at it with someone close to you, or with a bereavement counsellor.

Practical things to sort out

Following the death of someone close to you there are certain practical things that need to be done quickly, such as registering the death, arranging a funeral and looking at the instructions in the Will. If you are working you will need to speak to your employer; time off to deal with family emergencies is normally unpaid but some employers will offer paid compassionate leave.

Some people find being busy a welcome distraction as it gives them something to focus on. Others find the actions and decisions they need to take hard to manage.

The Scottish Government publication What to do after a death in Scotland at www.gov.scot/collections/what-to-do-after-a-death-in-scotland guides you through the practical and legal steps you need to take after someone has died. If you do not have internet access, call the Age Scotland helpline on 0800 12 44 222 and we will send you a copy.

Coping with a bereavement

As you get older, it is more likely that you will experience a bereavement. This may be the death of your parents, friends, a partner or even a child. While each of these losses can be devastating, the way you react and cope with each bereavement is likely to be different depending on the circumstances and your relationship with the person who has died. Coping with a bereavement is a very personal process and it can take some time.

The emotions you may experience can feel overwhelming at times, but things do get easier. Talking to someone you trust, a family member or a professional such as your doctor or a bereavement counsellor, is often the best way to start feeling better.

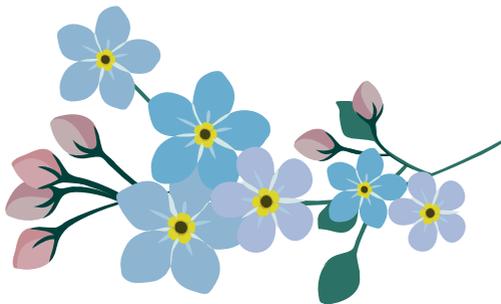

Dealing with grief

Grief is the often conflicting and sometimes overwhelming mixture of emotions you experience when someone close to you dies. Understanding these emotions can be difficult, but it is important to accept them and be reassured by the fact that there is no right or wrong way to feel. Though everyone grieves, each of us does so in our own way.

Grief is natural and can last a long time. How you feel can be influenced by a number of things such as your personality, your relationship with the person who has died, your religious beliefs and your cultural background.

Whatever grief is to you, talking to those close to you can really help. You may be reluctant to talk about your feelings, but you could talk to friends or family or you may be more comfortable talking to a professional who can help you to deal with your loss.

Cruse Bereavement Care Scotland may be able to help. You can call them on 0808 802 6161 or contact them through their website www.crusescotland.org.uk.

How you might be feeling

The emotions you experience as you grieve can be intense and you might feel some more strongly than others. There might be days when you cope better and others when these feelings seem overwhelming.

There is no right or wrong way to feel and the process of grieving is different for everyone. With time, and the right support, emotions experienced after bereavement tend to become less intense as you start to adjust and come to terms with your loss.

You may feel:

Numb: many people talk of feeling a sense of numbness and disbelief soon after a death, even if the death was expected. You might feel shocked and dazed.

Angry: you might be angry at the person who died for abandoning you, or angry at yourself if you have regrets. You may be angry at those around you for how they are reacting, even knowing that everyone deals with bereavement differently. If you have religious faith you may be angry and even question your faith.

You might just be angry and not know why; this is also perfectly natural.

Dealing with anger can be difficult; it might help to write down your thoughts or talk to someone you trust.

Frightened: fear and anxiety are very natural emotions; you may feel that you're struggling to control your thoughts and emotions. If you are overwhelmed or anxious, it could help to talk to someone.

Guilty: you may feel you could have done more to help, or regret something you said or did not say.

Try not to be too hard on yourself, as you cannot change the past. With time, you are likely to be able to accept what has happened.

If your sense of guilt doesn't go away or becomes more powerful, then you should try and talk about it with someone close to you, or someone who specialises in bereavement support.

Isolated: if the person who has died was your best source of good company, or you have been caring for them for a long time, you could feel lonely and that you have lost the structure of your life. You may want to isolate yourself because you don't want to mix with other people. Feeling isolated and alone can affect your confidence in the long term. If you can, find a way to stay connected to friends and family.

Relief: if the person had been very ill or was in pain before their death it is natural to feel relieved that they are no longer suffering. If they lived with dementia, you might have been grieving for them in stages as their condition progressed. You may also feel relief if the person who has died used to bully or abuse you; if you cannot talk to family about this, a grief counsellor may be able to help.

Empty and sad: after bereavement, feelings of emptiness and sadness may be intense and can often come in waves; some days or weeks might be easier to cope with than others. These feelings are natural and are when some healing can take place, even if you don't realise this at the time.

If sadness does not pass it may become depression. If you are unable to think about anything but the person who has died or you are struggling with looking after yourself, speak to your doctor or someone you trust about how you are feeling.

If you feel you might hurt yourself, talk to someone as soon as possible. You can talk to your doctor or:

- Samaritans: 116 123 (any time of the day or night)
- Breathing Space: 0800 838587 / breathingspace.scot
(open Mon-Thu 6pm - 2am and Fri 6pm - Mon 6am)

Looking after yourself

Bereavement can have a physical as well as an emotional impact. Complex emotions can leave you feeling drained, unmotivated and closed off. But you need to do what you can to look after yourself:

Sleep and rest: bereavement is exhausting. Be kind to yourself and sleep when you can or want to. You may struggle to sleep or your sleep may be disrupted, but rest and recharge whenever you can.

Eating and drinking: try to eat and drink regularly to stay as healthy as you can. Even if you have no appetite and food is the last thing on your mind, eating anything is better than eating nothing. See Age Scotland's Eat Well guide for advice and help.

For some, drink can go from being a comfort to being an escape, so be careful not to misuse alcohol. If your drinking or someone else's drinking is becoming unhealthy you should talk to a specialist organisation such as:

- Alcoholics Anonymous: 0800 9177 650 / www.alcoholics-anonymous.org.uk
- Drinkaware www.drinkaware.co.uk

Don't neglect yourself: It may be difficult to stick to everyday routines as you grieve; you might struggle with simple but important things like washing frequently, keeping doctor's appointments or washing up. If you don't manage to settle back into healthy routines, speak to your doctor to find out what help they can suggest.

Stay connected: You might want to have time to yourself for a while as you grieve and to avoid social situations. When you're ready, get in touch with friends and family and ask them over for a cuppa.

Some people find their faith is a great comfort, and find their place of worship a source of support socially, emotionally and spiritually.

Past bereavements

If you have experienced the death of someone close to you before, you may think you know what to expect, but some emotions may be stronger after the death of certain people, or you may experience emotions you haven't felt before.

Bereavement can bring memories of past deaths flooding back, including times when you did not have the support you needed – maybe after a miscarriage or a suicide at a time when those issues were not talked about. You may feel the need to mourn past losses before you can start to cope with your more recent bereavement. Talk to friends and family, your doctor or a bereavement counsellor.

There are specialist organisations you can contact such as:

- Sands, the stillbirth and neonatal death society offers support to those who have lost a child during pregnancy or after birth.
0808 164 3332 / www.sands.org.uk/onamission
- The Compassionate Friends support bereaved parents and their families. 0345 123 2304 / www.tcf.org.uk
- The Armed Forces charity SSAFA specialises in helping those who have served or have lost someone who served.
0800 731 4880 / www.ssafa.org.uk/scotland

Those around you

Family dynamics at a time of bereavement can be tricky both emotionally and practically.

While everyone grieves in their own way, family can be a great support. You can be a great support to them too, as you may each need different kinds of support at different times. Talking to each other and sharing memories is often the main way people start to accept the loss and begin to feel better.

It can be hard to start a conversation with someone who is grieving as you might be scared of saying the wrong thing, but people will usually just be glad that you care.

Speaking to young children can be difficult, especially if it's the first time they have experienced a bereavement, but it is important to be open and honest and answer their questions.

Winston's Wish supports children and young people after the death of a parent or sibling. Call them on 08088 020021 or see their website www.winstonswish.org.

If your spouse, partner or civil partner has died

If you have lost the person you shared your life with it will be hard. It may seem that you don't have anyone you can talk to about your emotions, or you may feel lonely and isolated.

There are helplines you can call if you want to talk to someone who understands what you are going through. Also ask your doctor about local support services to help you cope with the loss.

If you relied on your partner every day for things such as cooking and shopping or looking after money matters then you might want to ask for practical advice and support. You can contact:

- The Age Scotland helpline: 0800 12 44 222
- Moneyhelper: 0800 138 7777 / www.moneyhelper.org.uk/en/family-and-care/death-and-bereavement?
- Citizens Advice Scotland's Money Talk team: 0800 085 7145 / <https://moneytalkteam.org.uk/>

We have some information guides which may help too:
Benefits Maze, Money Matters, Housing options, and Avoiding scams

Looking ahead

You may find it difficult to look forward, but there's no rush. Looking after yourself and talking about how you feel can help to build foundations for the future. Try not to make any important decisions whilst your grief is intense: you may want to move house, or change a relationship, but give yourself plenty of time to think and don't let other people tell you what to do.

Don't feel guilty about looking ahead, having hope and plans for the future is not a betrayal or substitute for the life you had with the person who has died.

When you are ready, spend time with those close to you and do things you enjoy. Give yourself things to look forward to, like a day out with a friend or a weekend away.

Birthdays, anniversaries or important dates can be difficult, and you might want to plan what to do on those dates to celebrate good memories or to have time on your own.

When the time is right for you, you might want to find a course or class to attend or think about volunteering. Volunteering can be a good way meet interesting people and to help a cause that means a lot to you.

Grief can be a long and emotional process, but if you find yourself struggling to cope or would like to talk to someone, help and support is always available.

Useful organisations

Age Scotland

Age Scotland helpline: 0800 12 44 222

The Age Scotland helpline provides information, friendship and advice to older people, their relatives and carers.

If you need an interpreter call 0800 12 44 222 and simply state the language you need e.g. Polish or Urdu. Stay on the line for a few minutes and the Age Scotland helpline will do the rest.

You can call us for a copy of our publications list or download / order copies from our website at www.agescotland.org.uk.

Breathing Space

Confidential phone service for anyone in Scotland experiencing low mood, depression or anxiety.

Tel: 0800 83 85 87

www.breathingspace.scot

Cruse Bereavement Care Scotland

Information and support for people who are bereaved

Tel: 0808 802 6161

www.crusescotland.org.uk

They have information leaflets about understanding your grief, living through grief, bridging the gap (ideas for what to say to someone who is grieving) and after a suicide.

Drinkaware

An organisation funded by alcohol firms that offers tips on responsible drinking.

www.drinkaware.co.uk

Samaritans

Provides confidential support for people in distress, 24 hours a day.

Tel: 116 123

Email: jo@samaritans.org www.samaritans.org

How you can help

Our vision is a Scotland where everyone can love later life.

All the information and advice we provide is free and completely impartial and in helping people access their rights and entitlements, it can be life changing.

We are an ageing population and more people than ever are coming to us for support. You can help us be there for those that need us most.

Make a donation

No matter how small or large, donations make a massive difference and help us continue our important work.

- ▶ Call 03330 15 14 60
- ▶ Visit age.scot/donate
- ▶ Text LATERLIFE to 70085 to donate £5.*

Fundraise

Whether it is having a bake sale, running a marathon or knitting small hats for the Big Knit, there are so many ways to raise vital funds to support our work. To find out more, call 0333 323 2400 or visit age.scot/fundraise.

Leave us a gift in your Will

By choosing to leave us a gift in your Will, you can help Age Scotland to continue being there for vulnerable older people in the years to come. To find out more, call 0333 323 2400 or visit age.scot/legacy.

* Texts cost £5 plus one standard rate message

Let's keep in touch

Sign up to our newsletter

Our regular newsletters by email contain details of our campaigns, services and how you can support our work.

Sign up today by visiting age.scot/roundup

Follow us on social media

Our social media channels are a great way to keep up to date with our work and issues that affect older people.

/agescotland

@AgeScotland

@age_scotland

/AgeScotland

Age Scotland is the national charity for older people. We work to improve the lives of everyone over the age of 50 so that they can love later life.

Our vision is a Scotland where everyone can love later life.

Contact us:

Head office

0333 323 2400

Age Scotland helpline

0800 12 44 222

Email

info@agescotland.org.uk

Visit our website

www.agescotland.org.uk

Follow us on social media:

/agescotland

@AgeScotland

@age_scotland

/AgeScotland

We are grateful to the Scottish Government for part-funding this publication

