What this guide is about

Have you recently started to feel that you could do with a little extra help at home? Maybe you could use a hand with the housework, gardening or shopping? Or perhaps you’re finding it harder to move around your house, or take care of yourself?

Asking for help can be hard. You might not want to admit that you’re struggling with everyday tasks, but it’s something we all face as we get older. The good news is there’s lots of help available, so you can continue to live safely and independently at home for longer.
It’s a good idea to find out the number for your local council. They’ll be able to provide a lot of the support and information mentioned in this guide.

My local council phone number is:
Having a care needs assessment

As you get older, you might find you need some help in your day-to-day life, for example with personal care, such as washing and dressing.

It can be hard to admit you’re finding it tricky to do things you used to do on your own and it’s understandable if you’re reluctant to ask for help. You might worry that you’ll lose your independence or privacy. But needing a little help to do certain things is a normal part of ageing.

If you need help, the first step is to contact the social services department of your local council, or ask a family member or friend to do it for you. Explain that you need some help at home and ask for a care needs assessment (also known as a needs assessment). Sometimes your doctor may refer you for an assessment, or it can be part of your hospital discharge. It’s free and you can get one regardless of your income or savings. Ask how long you’ll wait for your assessment and let the council know if you need help urgently.
Step one: your care needs assessment
There are various ways a social care professional can assess you, but generally they come to your home to see how you’re managing everyday tasks and what you’d like to achieve in your day-to-day life. They consider:

• your health, abilities and what you can and can’t do, or struggle to do

• your current living arrangements

• what help you currently get, if any, and whether this can continue – for example, it may be that friends and family are helping you now but can’t continue to do so long-term.

• how you would like to be supported.

The assessor should consider the emotional and social side of your life, your physical safety and your overall wellbeing. If necessary, and with your permission, they should contact any health and social care professionals who need to be involved in your assessment and care. If you have a carer, they should be involved in your assessment. Your carer is also entitled to a carer’s assessment – if they request this – to see if anything can be done to help them in their caring role.

“I got in touch with Age UK about getting help at home and they recommended my first port of call should be an assessment from my local council.”
Jim, 80
The assessor considers the type of help you need and whether your needs meet the eligibility criteria for help from the council. Whether or not you’re eligible for support from the council depends on your needs. There are national eligibility criteria that you must be assessed against and the things you need help with must have a significant impact on your wellbeing.

Wales has its own national eligibility criteria that all local councils must comply with.

The support your council provides can include:

• adaptations or equipment to make your home safer or easier to live in
• help from home carers or a personal assistant
• day care in a day centre.

Assessors should consider not only the support you need right now but also the support that may prevent you needing more significant help in the future. If you’re not eligible for help from the council, they should recommend how else your needs should be met.
You can prepare for your assessment by thinking about the kind of help you need. Be specific and think about your cultural, social, religious and emotional needs to, as these may be relevant in your assessment.

For example, you might mention:

“I need someone to help me get up and dressed in the mornings.”

“I need help to shower regularly.”

“I need to be reminded to take my medication.”

“I want to visit my brother twice a month.”

“I want to go to my place of worship once a week.”
Think about whether it would help you to have a family member, friend or carer there for your assessment. The council must provide you with an independent advocate if there’s no appropriate person to support you and you’d have difficulty being involved in the assessment process.

An advocate is someone who supports and represents you, to make sure you can be involved in the process as fully as possible.

Step two: your care plan

After the assessment, a care plan (sometimes called a care and support plan) should be agreed and you should get a copy. The care plan sets out how the council is going to meet your care needs. If some or all of your needs are being met through providing a direct payment, the care plan should record this. There’s more information about these payments on page 12.

‘Mum wanted me to be there when she had her assessment just to make sure everything was covered.’

Sandra, 46
Step three: the financial assessment
If a needs assessment shows you qualify for support, you’ll have a financial assessment (also called a means test) to see whether you have to contribute towards the costs. This considers your income, such as pensions and benefits, and capital, for example any savings you might have. Not all income and capital are considered in your assessment.

Capital can include money, savings, assets or even shares and trusts. However, your main property won’t be included in your financial assessment.

When deciding how much to charge you, the council must work out what you can afford to pay so that you’re left with a minimum level of income. See page 28 to find out more.

Good to know
If you have more than £23,250 in capital, you’re not entitled to the council’s help with care fees and you’re considered a ‘self-funder’. Though the council won’t help you with the costs, if you meet the eligibility criteria the council can still help meet your care needs and arrange care for you but you will have to cover the costs, including a possible arrangement fee.
Step four: deciding what care services you get and how they’ll be arranged
How much financial help you’ll get from the council can depend on local costs for services.

If the council will pay for all or some of your care costs, you have two options:

1. The council can arrange care services for you.

2. The council can give you a direct payment, which is a cash payment you can use to pay for a carer or any other services that help meet your needs.

See pages 26-34 to find out more about different ways to pay for your care.

Getting support at home

Having a home that’s clean and comfortable can go a long way towards helping you feel happy and healthy. If you’re no longer able to keep your home as tidy as you’d like, or you’re finding it more difficult to take care of yourself, don’t be afraid to ask for help.

The examples in this section are all forms of care and support your local council might have a duty to provide, but this will depend on your needs. If you’re having problems with anything outlined below, contact the council about a care needs assessment as outlined in the previous section.
Help around the house

Sometimes, just a little support with the housework or gardening means you can enjoy living at home without worrying about how you’ll get everything done.

Help with cleaning

If you could use some help with cleaning, start by asking around for recommendations. You’ll be inviting a new person into your home, so it’s important to find someone you trust.

You could:

• ask your neighbours or local friends for a recommendation

• ask your local Age UK or Age Cymru if it provides a cleaning service or has a list of suggested cleaners

• contact your local council to see if it has a list of approved cleaning agencies.

Make a list of the chores you’d like done and work out how many hours you can afford to pay for. Charges will vary, but you can find out the average cost of cleaners in your area by asking a few different ones for quotes. If you can’t afford to have your whole house cleaned every week, focus on the jobs you find most difficult, such as changing your bed sheets.

Your cleaner might also help with laundry, so do ask if that’s something you need. You could also ask your dry cleaners if they have a delivery service or special rates for older people. Some people offer ironing services in their homes and may be able to pick up your ironing and deliver it back to you.
Help with cooking
If you’re finding it difficult to cook, you could buy ready meals from the supermarket, or try one of the specialist companies that provide frozen or chilled meals ready for you to heat up. Some also offer hot meals. You can ring these companies for a catalogue and many have websites with detailed menu and dietary options.

There might also be lunch clubs in your area. Ask your local Age UK or council for details. You could also be eligible for meals on wheels for a small charge if you have particular needs.

Help with DIY and gardening
Doing DIY or small jobs around the home and garden can be a chore whatever your age, but especially if you aren’t as mobile as you used to be. More than 70 local Age UKs have handyperson schemes that offer older people extra help with practical jobs. There is usually an hourly cost for these services.

Next steps
Contact Age UK or Age Cymru to find out if there’s a handyperson or gardening scheme in your area. Contact Foundations to find your local Home Improvement Agency for assistance (page 41) or in Wales, contact Care & Repair Cymru (page 41). You can also contact Thrive, a charity that offers practical advice to make gardening easier (page 43).
Help getting out and about

If getting out to the shops is tricky, see if a volunteer from your local Age UK or the Royal Voluntary Service (page 42) can go with you or even do your shopping for you. You can also order shopping online from most supermarkets and have it delivered for a small fee. If ordering online isn’t for you, is there a friend or relative who could help? If you’d like some help getting to grips with the internet, contact Online Centres Network (page 42) to find your nearest centre.

There might be a transport service such as Dial-a-Ride in your area that can help you get to the shops. This is a door-to-door minibus service for people who can’t use public transport. Drivers are trained to help people who have mobility problems.

“My son helped me set up my online shop. It was daunting at first but I’ve got the hang of it now. I quite enjoy it!”
Jean, 80

Next steps

Visit www.gov.uk/community-transport-services-shopmobility or ask your local council for more information.

Contact your local Age UK to find out about the transport schemes available in your area. In Wales, speak to your local Age Cymru.
Help taking care of yourself

As well as helping you with personal care such as eating and drinking, going to the toilet and personal hygiene, you can get support taking care of your appearance from your local council.

Even if you don’t need a carer, you might appreciate occasional help with personal grooming, such as washing your hair or cutting your toenails. It’s not always easy to ask for help with these sorts of things, but the people helping you are professionals who are used to doing it, and they can often visit you at home.

If you need help cutting your nails, contact your local Age UK or Age Cymru in Wales. It may offer a nail-cutting service or be able to recommend someone who can do it for you. If you have a long-term condition, such as diabetes or arthritis, your feet are particularly vulnerable. Check them regularly and make sure you attend any check-ups as requested. If you notice any problems, see your doctor as soon as possible. They may refer you to an NHS chiropodist. You could also choose to see a private chiropodist. Contact the The College of Podiatry (page 42) to find someone nearby.

If washing your hair is getting difficult, see if a local hairdresser can visit your home to wash it.

Next steps

If you need help with any of these tasks, contact your local council for a care needs assessment.

Read our guide More money in your pocket to see if you can claim extra money towards the costs. In Wales, Age Cymru has its own version of this guide.
Making your home work for you

Sometimes all you need to manage better at home are a few useful bits of equipment. These don’t have to be expensive or a big commitment.

Useful equipment at home

• In the kitchen, kettle tippers, wide-handled cutlery and spike boards can help if you find it hard to grip or carry.

• Microwaves can make it very quick and easy to cook or heat up food, and they reduce washing up.

• Raisers can be fitted to beds or chairs, making it easier to get in and out.

• Long-handled shoehorns and gadgets can help with putting on socks or doing up buttons.

• Telephones with large buttons, talking clocks and watches, or raised markings on appliance controls can help if you have sight problems.

• If you have any hearing loss, flashing doorbells and smoke alarms can help you.

• If you have memory problems, a digital reminder can prompt you about your daily tasks, and a calendar clock can show you the day, date and time if you tend to forget.

• If you find it difficult to answer the front door, consider using a key safe. This is a secure box outside your home where you can leave door keys. It has an access code that you can give to trusted relatives, carers or health professionals who need to come in. Only use a police-approved key safe and get it properly installed.
You can buy a lot of these things on the high street or online, or you can contact the Disabled Living Foundation (page 41) to find suppliers. Always seek advice before buying anything, as these can be expensive purchases. You’ll need to make sure they’re right for you and that you’re not being overcharged.

If you’re considering any of this equipment to help you at home and you haven’t already had one, you should ask your local council for a care needs assessment. Councils must provide this for you regardless of your income and savings and you may find you’re eligible for free equipment (see pages 6-12 for details). Even if you can’t get help with the costs, the council should be able to tell you what equipment would help you.

You can also get an assessment from a private occupational therapist who can help you identify ways to stay living independently. Contact the Royal College of Occupational Therapists for a list of private practitioners (page 42).

Visit asksara.livingmadeeasy.org.uk/selector for a self-help guide to gadgets or equipment that could help you (page 41).

Read our guide Adapting your home and our factsheet Disability equipment and home adaptations for more information. In Wales, read Age Cymru’s factsheet Obtaining disability equipment and home adaptations in Wales. Our guide At home with dementia has tips specifically for people living with dementia.
Home adaptations

Simple changes to your home can help you continue to live independently and safely. For example, a grab rail at the front door to help you step inside or an entry intercom to help you answer the door might make a big difference to how you live.

You can also make more substantial changes, such as fitting your home with a stairlift or an accessible shower. If you own your own property, inform your household insurer of any major changes and check that items such as a stairlift are covered. If you rent your home, ask your landlord before making any permanent changes.

Start by contacting the social services department of your local council. Someone will assess your needs to see if you’re eligible for help (pages 6-12). If you are, you could qualify for the following:

- In England, any adaptations you need for daily living that cost £1,000 or less – for example, a raised toilet seat, a grab rail or a ramp – and specialist equipment – for example, a special bed or walking frame – are provided free of charge.
• In Wales, your local social services may provide some equipment and adaptations free of charge, or you may have to pay a certain amount depending on your income and savings. Alternatively, you may qualify for help under a Rapid Response Adaptation Programme. Read Age Cymru’s factsheet Obtaining disability equipment and home adaptations in Wales for more information or contact Care & Repair Cymru to find out more (page 41).

If the council recommend that you need an adaptation that costs more than £1,000, you may be able to get a Disabled Facilities Grant (DFG) to help with the cost.

Local councils can also provide help with repairs, improvements and adaptations. This help is in addition to a DFG and can be in the form of a loan or grant, equipment or advice.

In England, contact Foundations (page 41) to find out if there’s a Home Improvement Agency in your area. It can help you with repairs, improvements or adaptations to your home. For example, it can help you apply for grants, arrange surveys and get estimates. It can also oversee the work while it’s being carried out, to make sure it’s done to the right specifications for you. In Wales contact Care & Repair Cymru (page 41).

Using technology to stay safe

If you worry about falling or having an accident when you’re home alone but still enjoy living independently, think about using a telecare service. Telecare can also help if you live with someone who is unwell or disabled, or if you’ve recently come out of hospital and want a little extra support while you’re recovering.

Telecare services use simple technology to give you, your family and friends peace of mind that you’re safe, while still maintaining your privacy and independence.

Telecare offers support in a variety of ways. The most common example is a personal alarm, which lets you call for help if you’re unwell or have a fall and can’t reach a telephone. Other examples of telecare include:

- sensors that automatically detect if you’ve fallen and raise an alert
- fire alarms that flash or vibrate
- plug-in hall lights that turn on at a certain time or when they detect movement
- gas detectors that can raise an alarm and even shut the gas off completely if it’s been left on
- devices that can detect if you’ve had a seizure
- special plugs for the bath and sink that allow the water to only reach a certain level
- movement sensors that can turn on lights when you get out of bed
- door sensors that detect if someone has left the house alone or left and not returned within a certain time.
Depending on your finances, you may have to pay something towards the cost of telecare. Once the council have carried out a care needs assessment, they will assess your income and capital to see whether you need to contribute. See pages 26-34 to find out more.

Before buying telecare products:

• Make sure you’re receiving all the financial help you’re entitled to.

• Read customer reviews and check guarantee and return policies in case the product doesn’t meet your needs.

• Consider leasing or hiring larger or more expensive products instead of buying them, as your needs may change.

“My mum’s 86, and has had some sensors installed and now carries a personal alarm. I think it gives us both peace of mind.”
Nicola, 57

Next steps

Contact the Disabled Living Foundation (page 41) to find out more about telecare.
Joseph’s care assessment led to him receiving the help he needs.

Joseph asked for a care assessment after he started to struggle with everyday tasks.

‘In the past few years, the everyday things I used to take for granted have started to get more difficult. My fingers don’t seem to be able to manage the buttons on my shirt as well as they used to and I have difficulty carrying things. And unless there’s someone there to help me, I find it really difficult to get up and down the stairs or cook myself a proper meal.

‘My daughter suggested I get a care needs assessment. So I contacted the social services department of my local council to ask about it, and they told me that people can get a care assessment for free.’

“I feel much happier knowing I can start getting my life back on track.”
'A few weeks later a social worker came to my house to talk about how I was managing. I told her about the trouble I was having.

‘My daughter was there with me, which was great, as she helped me explain my problems.

‘After the assessment, the social worker agreed a care plan with me. It outlined that I could get a home carer who would come in twice a day to help me dress and prepare my meals. It also said that a stairlift would help me get up and down the stairs more easily.

‘I still need to have a financial assessment to see whether I’ll have to contribute to the costs, but I feel much happier knowing I can start getting my life back on track and stay living at home for as long as possible.’
Help with finances

If the council decides you’re eligible for support or care, you might be happy for them to arrange or provide services for you. You might feel this works best for you. But if you want more choice and control, there are other options.

Arranging and paying for your care services

In England, if you’re eligible for financial support the council must provide you with a personal budget. This is a budget for arranging and paying for your care and support. The amount of money depends on your needs as set out in your care plan. There are different ways you can manage this money:

- You can get the council to manage it and arrange services for you. The council spends the money on services to meet your needs.

- You can directly receive the money in your personal budget and spend it as you choose on services that meet your needs as set out in your care plan. This is called a direct payment.
Direct payments allow you to be more flexible. You could use them to choose your own carers, people you feel comfortable with and who could visit you regularly, rather than having different carers each time.

You might want to pay someone to help you go shopping, for example. If you have a place of worship, or you want to do a course, you can use the money you’ve been allocated to get you there. You can use it in a variety of ways, as long as it meets the needs in your care plan.

Direct payments are not right for everyone. You might have to take on the duties of an employer, depending on your support or care needs. You can get support with this from your local council. You can also nominate someone to receive and manage the money for you if you don’t feel able to do it yourself.

However you arrange your care, it’s your choice. If you choose not to receive direct payments, the council must arrange or provide care services for you.

In Wales you can receive a direct payment, as outlined above, or the council can arrange your services but there are no personal budgets. For more information see Age Cymru’s factsheet Direct payments for social care services in Wales.

Next steps

Read our factsheet Personal budgets and direct payments in social care for more information.
If you’re charged for services

If you’ve had a financial assessment and the council decides you have to pay towards care services, it must make sure you’re left with a minimum amount of income for daily living costs, known as your ‘Minimum Income Guarantee’ (MIG). You must also be left with money for housing-related costs, such as rent, mortgage repayments and Council Tax. If your disability benefits are included in the financial assessment, the council should allow you to keep enough benefit to allow you to meet any disability-related expenses. Check your local council’s website for their charging information. If you think the fee is unreasonable, ask for a review. If you’re still not happy, use the council’s complaints procedure.

In Wales the rules are very similar. You must be left with a ‘Minimum Income Amount (MIA)’ after you’ve been charged for services. There is also a maximum weekly charge.

Next steps

Read our factsheet Paying for care and support at home for further details. Age Cymru has their own version of this factsheet.
Arranging your own care and support

If you’re paying for your own care and support at home – either privately or through direct payments – there are a number of ways you can find a provider.

Home care agencies
An agency can provide carers who will support you to live independently at home. They can help you with getting in and out of bed, washing, getting dressed, preparing a meal or collecting medication, for example. The duration and number of visits depends on your needs.

There are several ways to find a home care agency:

• Ask your local council for a list of agencies. It must give you information and advice even if it isn’t providing any other services for you.

• Contact the UK Home Care Association (page 40) for details of home care agencies that follow its code of practice. It also produces a leaflet called Choosing care at home.

• Contact the Care Quality Commission (CQC), the national regulator for care services, for a list of agencies and its inspection reports (page 40). You can also access these reports on the CQC website. In Wales, contact the Care Inspectorate Wales (CIW) (page 40).

• Search online or check your phone book.

• Ask friends, relatives or neighbours about their experiences with local agencies. Remember that while a personal recommendation is a good starting point, agencies can change and what suits one person may not suit another.
Ask agencies to send you a brochure and their price list or look for one on their website. Customer reviews can be useful, but you should always contact the agencies you like to see if they’re right for you.

You may want to ask:

• whether they have cared for anyone with similar needs to yours
• what training their care workers receive
• whether the agency ensures that all staff have been checked by the Disclosure and Barring Service (DBS) – this is a check on someone’s criminal record, formerly called a CRB check
• what happens if a regular worker is off sick or on holiday
• how to contact the agency in an emergency
• whether they charge extra for evenings or weekends
• what arrangements are in place to deal with concerns and complaints if things go wrong.

There may be other questions you or your loves ones would like to ask. Think about what’s important to you.

Your chosen agency will carry out its own care needs assessment to find out what help you need. It should produce a care plan showing your carer’s arrival times, what they’ll do, how long they’ll stay and any other relevant information. This should be reviewed every year, or more often if your needs change.
Employing someone directly

Instead of using an agency, you may prefer to employ someone directly to help you. If you do this, you’ll need to handle their tax, National Insurance and pension. Skills for Care has useful resources for employing someone directly on their website – www.employingpersonalassistants.co.uk. You must make sure you’re insured in case your carer has an accident. You should consider getting a DBS check for the person you employ, as this helps you know whether they have had a criminal conviction. The DBS can tell you how to go about this (page 40).

You can’t generally use direct payments to employ a partner or relative who lives with you, but the council should allow this if, for example, it’s necessary to meet your needs. Think about how employing a partner or relative could affect your relationship, and check whether becoming a paid carer affects their eligibility for benefits.
How much will it cost?
Home care costs can vary depending on where you live, the sort of care you need, how many hours of care you need and what times of the day and week you need it.

If you’re a self-funder, it’s worth looking at a number of providers to get a better idea of the price range.

In Wales, there’s a maximum weekly charge for non-residential care arranged by your local council following an assessment so this may be cheaper than arranging services privately.

Even if the council isn’t paying for your care, it can help with information and advice about local care services. This will give you an idea of the cost of care and the range of providers in your area. Self-funders also have the right to a needs assessment from their local council and the assessment can help you find and plan appropriate care.

While cost is important, it needs to be weighed against the quality of care. You can contact the CQC in England or CIW in Wales to see how a care provider is performing (page 40).

Extra money if you’re disabled

If you have a illness or disability and need help with personal care, you might be able to claim Attendance Allowance (AA). You can use AA to pay for anything – it doesn’t have to be spent on care or carers, although many people use it in that way.

You can claim AA if you:

• are State Pension age or older (if you’re under State Pension age you must apply for Personal Independence Payment instead)

• require help with personal care, such as getting washed or dressed, or supervision to keep you safe. You don’t have to actually get this help – AA is based on the help you need, not the help you actually get.

• have a disability or long-term illness, including sight or hearing impairments, or a condition such as dementia

• have needed help for at least six months (there are special rules if you’re terminally ill).
AA isn’t means-tested, so it doesn’t matter how much income or savings you have. It has a lower rate and a higher rate which depends on whether you need help in the day or night, or both.

If you qualify for AA, you could also be entitled to increased means-tested benefits such as Housing Benefit, Council Tax Support (Council Tax Reduction in Wales) or Pension Credit – Guarantee Credit.

If you receive services from your local council, they can take AA into account when working out how much income you have in the financial assessment. If AA or other disability benefits are taken into account, the council must make sure you keep enough benefit to meet your disability expenses.

Next steps

If things aren’t working out

It’s vital that you’re comfortable with the care you receive and feel confident it’s right for you.

What should I do if I’m not happy with the care I’m receiving?

If you’re unhappy with your care, first try to resolve it by having an informal conversation with your local council or care agency. If that doesn’t work, you can make a formal complaint to the council if they arranged or provided the services. If you have made private, self-funded arrangements, you can complain using the provider’s complaints procedure.

If you’re not happy with the outcome of the complaint, you can ask the Local Government and Social Care Ombudsman to investigate (page 41). The Ombudsman deals with complaints made about councils, as well as care providers. In Wales, contact the Public Services Ombudsman for Wales (page 00).

You can tell the regulatory organisation in your nation about your complaint: the Care Quality Commission in England or the Care Inspectorate Wales (page 40).
Discrimination
Everyone has the right to be treated with dignity and respect. If you feel you’ve been discriminated against because of your age, race, sexual orientation or gender, contact the Equality Advisory and Support Service for advice (page 41).

Neglect and abuse
Neglect can be unintentional, such as a carer not turning up when they should or not giving the correct medication on time. It can also be intentional, such as someone ignoring your personal hygiene needs or not providing you with the support you need. Abuse can take different forms, including (but not limited to) physical, psychological, sexual and financial abuse.

If you experience neglect or abuse from anyone who cares for you, or you feel you’re at risk of neglect or abuse, contact the local council safeguarding team immediately. The council has a safeguarding duty to take action in response to concerns about abuse or neglect where necessary.

Mental capacity
If someone lacks mental capacity, for example as a result of dementia, there are legal safeguards in place to protect them.

If someone has ‘mental capacity’, they have the ability to make and understand the consequences of their decisions.

A person may be treated as lacking mental capacity for a decision if an assessment shows, for example, they are unable to understand information relevant to the decision or cannot remember the information long enough to make the decision. A person should be treated as having mental capacity to make the decision, unless evidence shows they do not.

Under the Mental Capacity Act 2005, any decision made for a person lacking mental capacity must be in their ‘best interests’. Working out what is in the person’s best interests involves taking into account their particular circumstances, including their past and present wishes and feelings and the views of people to know them, such as family, friends and carers.

What if I need more help at home?

You may start to feel you need more support at home. You might not be as mobile or have as much energy as you once did, and your needs may change. If this happens, you can always ask your local council to review your needs. They’ll see if they can provide any additional services, or whether you’re now eligible for help you haven’t had before. If you’re receiving direct payments, this review may result in an increase in funding.

If you’re employing your own carers, see if you can afford to employ them for a few extra hours. Talk to the agency (if you’re using one) to see what it can offer.

There may come a time when your current home is no longer suitable, even with care, support or adaptations. If this happens, the options you could consider include:

• downsizing to a more manageable property
• moving in with family
• moving into sheltered housing
• moving into a care home.

It can be understandably difficult to think about leaving your home, especially if you’ve lived there a long time, but it’s a good idea to consider your options and discuss them with friends and family well in advance. You can then be sure you’ve made your wishes known and thought about what’s best for you.
