Coping with the death of a loved one
Information written with you in mind.

This information guide has been produced with the help of older people, carers and expert peer reviewers.

Published: January 2022

We’d love to hear from you.

1) Join our Readers’ Panel. Have your say and be involved in updating our guides by joining our Readers’ Panel. You don’t need any specialist knowledge at all.

Join our Readers’ Panel at www.ageuk.org.uk/readers-panel.

2) Tell us your story. We want to include real voices of real people in our guides. We’d love to hear about your experiences.

Email us at stories@ageuk.org.uk.

This information guide has been prepared by Age UK and contains general advice only, it should not be relied on as a basis for any decision or action and cannot be used as a substitute for professional advice.

Neither Age UK nor any of its subsidiary companies or charities accepts any liability arising from its use and it is the reader’s sole responsibility to ensure any information is up to date and accurate.

Please note that the inclusion of named agencies, websites, companies, products, services or publications in this information guide does not constitute a recommendation or endorsement by Age UK or any of its subsidiary companies or charities.
Contents

What this guide is about 4

Coping with a bereavement
- Dealing with grief 7
- How you might be feeling 10
- Talking about your feelings 16
- Looking after yourself 17
- Those around you 20
- If you’ve been left alone 22
- Past bereavements 25
- Looking ahead 26

Useful organisations 27
What this guide is about

The death of someone close to us can be one of the hardest things we ever have to go through. Whether it’s expected or not, it can affect us in many different ways – and, unfortunately, we just have to cope the best we can.

Grief is very personal and there’s no right or wrong way to deal with losing someone you love. But this guide explores how you might be feeling, why you might be feeling like that, and some of the things that could help – now and in the future.
You might not feel ready to read this guide now – and that’s OK. You might decide to come back to it at a different time. You might also prefer to look at it with someone you’re close to, or with a bereavement counsellor.

As far as possible, the information given in this guide is applicable across the UK.

This might help

After a loved one dies, there are certain practical things that need doing, such as registering the death and arranging a funeral. Some people find getting on with practicalities a welcome distraction – while for others, it’s the last thing they want to think about.

To try and make things a bit easier, our guide When someone dies takes you through the practical things you might need to think about.
Coping with a bereavement

Unfortunately, as we get older, it gets more likely that we’ll experience a bereavement. This might be the loss of a parent, a friend, a partner or even a child. How we react is likely to depend on our relationship with the person and the circumstances of their death.

Grief is very personal and it can take some time to come to terms with how you feel. The emotions you experience might feel overwhelming at times but – even though it might not feel like it at first – things do get easier. Talking to someone, whether that’s a loved one or a professional such as a doctor or bereavement counsellor, is often the best way to start feeling better.
Dealing with grief

Grief is the often conflicting mixture of emotions you experience when someone close to you dies. It can be overwhelming – but it’s important to remember that there’s no right or wrong way to feel. Everyone grieves in their own way.

Grief is natural and it can last a long time. How you feel might be influenced by several things – such as your personality, your beliefs, your relationship with the person who’s died, and how they died.

While some people will reach out for help shortly after a bereavement, others will work through their feelings themselves and might only seek specialist support weeks, months, or even years later. There’s no one-size-fits-all approach – the important thing is to do what feels right for you.

Lots of us can be reluctant to open up about our emotions, but talking about how you feel is really important. There’s more information on page 16 that can help you talk through how you’re feeling.

This might help

There are support groups and professionals that can help you deal with your loss – many of which are listed at the end of this guide. Whatever your feelings, you don’t need to deal with them alone.

When you’re ready, At a Loss (page 28) can direct you to the right bereavement support services for you.
The death of a loved one can be particularly difficult to cope with when you’re unable to say goodbye and grieve in the way that feels right to you. Sadly, this has been the case for many people during the coronavirus pandemic.

Due to restrictions, you might have been unable to see the person before they died, or to hold the funeral service you know they’d have wanted. This can leave you feeling that things are still unresolved, or that you haven’t said a proper goodbye. You might also have been kept from seeking comfort in the company of family and friends – at a time when you could really do with a hug.
It’s possible that your feelings of grief are further complicated by knowing that restrictions prevented your loved one spending time doing the things they enjoyed with the people they cared about.

You might also feel that your loss has been overlooked or lessened because of the circumstances of the pandemic – or even that the person’s death has been treated as a statistic. It’s possible that being cut off from support networks by restrictions has made this even worse.

But each person who died is loved and missed – and your grief is valid. It’s as important as ever that you look after yourself and reach out for support if you need it.

This might help

Cruse Bereavement Care (page 28) offers support to those coping with bereavement during the pandemic.
How you might be feeling

The emotions you experience as you grieve can be intense, and you might feel some more strongly than others. There might be days you cope better and days you feel overwhelmed.

You might cry a lot – and that’s OK. Lots of people find that they feel better after crying. Equally, you might not cry at all – and that’s OK, too. There’s no formula for how to respond to the death of a loved one. There are no right or wrong emotions. And with time, and the right support, your feelings of grief tend to become less intense and you can start to adjust and come to terms with your loss.

Numb
After a loved one dies, you might feel a sense of numbness and disbelief, even if the death was expected. You might feel like you’re in a daze. As this initial shock passes, you may experience other strong emotions.
Empty and sad
The feeling of emptiness that can follow someone’s death might feel overwhelming and like it’ll never go away. At this time, sadness can come in waves – some days or weeks might seem easier to cope with than others. This is a natural response when someone dies.

It’s during this period of sadness that some healing can take place, even if it doesn’t feel that way.

But some people find that this sadness doesn’t pass and develops into depression. If you feel depressed, you can’t think about anything but the person who’s died, or you’re struggling with things like eating and sleeping, talk to your doctor or a loved one – it’s important to get support if you need it.

This might help
Your emotions might be so overwhelming that you feel you might hurt yourself in some way. If so, you should talk to someone as soon as possible, whether that’s your doctor or a specialist helpline.

Call Samaritans (page 29) at any time of the day or night on 116 123 if you need someone to talk to. In Wales, you can also contact the C.A.L.L. helpline (page 28). In Northern Ireland, you can also contact Lifeline (page 28).

If you’ve harmed yourself or you think you’re about to harm yourself, call 999 or go to A&E.
Angry and hostile
You might feel angry with the person who’s died for leaving you. You might feel angry at yourself – questioning whether you could have done more or regretting things you said or did. You might feel angry at those around you for a lack of understanding. You might not even know who or what your anger is directed towards.

Those of faith feel angry, too – and might even find themselves questioning their faith at such a difficult and emotional time.

Dealing with anger can be difficult, even though it’s perfectly natural. Some people find it helpful to write their thoughts down. Others find that talking to someone helps – whether that’s someone you’re close to or a professional such as a doctor or bereavement counsellor.
Afraid

Fear and anxiety are natural emotions to experience after a bereavement. You might worry because your thoughts and feelings seem hard to control. You might feel anxious about what’s coming next, such as the person’s funeral. Or you might feel scared of losing someone else in the future.

If you’re scared, overwhelmed or anxious, it could help to talk to someone. If you’re worried about coping with practical day-to-day things, see page 17.

Guilty

It’s common to experience feelings of guilt when someone you’re close to dies. You might wonder whether you could have done more to help them, or regret something you said – or didn’t say – when they were alive.

Try not to be too hard on yourself or anyone else. With time, you’re likely to reach some acceptance of what’s happened and be able to move forwards with positive memories.

However, if your sense of guilt doesn’t go away or becomes more powerful, you should try and talk about it with someone you’re close to, or with someone who specialises in bereavement support.
Relieved
You might experience feelings of relief when someone you love dies. This can be unexpected and unsettling – but there are lots of reasons you might feel this way. It might be because the person is no longer in pain or distress – perhaps after a long illness. It might be because the person themselves had said they felt ready to die. Or it might be because you’re no longer experiencing the stress and worry of caring responsibilities.

The reasons people feel relieved after a death are very individual to them and their relationship with the person who’s died – but whatever your situation, it’s nothing to feel guilty about. It’s very normal to feel this way.

This might help
You can access bereavement support if you’re experiencing feelings of grief while someone is still living. This is sometimes called ‘anticipatory grief’ and is commonly felt when a loved one has a life-limiting condition.
Isolated
Losing a loved one can make you feel very lonely. This might be because you were very close to them – for instance, they were your partner or spouse – or because you were their carer for a long time. Or it might be because you can’t face talking to other people or socialising like you used to.

Whatever the reason, feeling isolated and alone can affect your confidence long term. If you can, talk to others about how you’re feeling and try to stay connected to friends and family.

If you were very close to the person who’s died, other people might not know how best to be there for you. If you feel able to, reaching out to ask for help or to let them know you’re ready to talk could make them more confident in offering support.

---

This might help
If you feel isolated, there’s information on pages 22-23 that could help you practically and emotionally.
Talking about your feelings

However you’re feeling, it’s important to talk about it. This can be easier said than done, as many people feel uncomfortable talking about death – whether they’re bereaved themselves or trying to support someone who’s lost a loved one.

But death affects us all. Talking to someone about how you’re feeling, or just talking about the person who’s died, can really make you feel better. It’s also a chance to remember the person and celebrate their life and what they still mean to you.

Starting this kind of conversation with others can help them feel more comfortable talking to you about what’s happened. You never know, it might also give them the opportunity to discuss feelings they’ve felt unable to share.

It isn’t easy. While there might be some days you enjoy talking about the person who’s died, there might be days when it just feels too difficult. It might also be some time before you feel able to talk about them and how you’re feeling. Some people might never really feel ready.

You don’t necessarily have to talk to someone you know. You might feel more comfortable talking to a professional – and there are support groups and professionals that can help you deal with your loss. You can find many of them listed at the end of this guide on pages 27-30.
Looking after yourself

Bereavement can have a physical impact as well as an emotional one. It can leave you feeling exhausted and unmotivated. But it’s important that you continue to do what you can to look after yourself.

Sleep and rest
Grief is tiring – whether it’s arranging the practicalities, travelling, sleepless nights or just being overwhelmed with everything going on. Even if you can’t sleep, or your sleep is disrupted, be kind to yourself and rest when you can.

The charity Mind (page 29) gives practical tips on how to improve sleep on its website.

Food and drink
It might be the last thing on your mind, but try to eat and drink regularly. Even if you’ve lost your appetite, it’ll help keep you healthy and boost your energy levels. Don’t worry too much about eating a balanced diet – eating anything is better than eating nothing.

Sometimes, drinking can become an escape from a difficult time – so be careful not to misuse alcohol. If your drinking is becoming unhealthy, or you notice that someone else is starting to rely on alcohol to cope with their grief, talk to a specialist organisation such as Drinkaware (page 28).

This might help

Our guide Healthy living has more information on keeping yourself in good health.
Self-care
It can feel difficult to take care of yourself following a bereavement. This might mean you don’t wash as frequently as you used to, you don’t take your medication, or you miss doctor’s appointments. But it’s important to look after yourself.

If you find yourself neglecting your care needs, or you notice loved ones neglecting theirs, it’s worth talking to someone you’re close to or a professional such as a doctor.

If the person who’s died used to help you with things like washing or getting to the doctor or the shops, see page 22 for information about where to get support.

Staying connected
After a loss, you might find yourself becoming more withdrawn, avoiding social situations, and staying at home more. But it’s important to try and stay connected with friends and loved ones.

It can feel hard to talk to others, especially when you might not feel like being social. But if someone was close to the person who’s died too, they might be feeling a similar way – so a chat over a cuppa might help you both.
When you’re ready, is there a course or class you’d like to try? It can be a great way to lift your mood and meet new people, some of whom may be in a similar position to you. If it’d make you feel more comfortable, you could encourage someone you know to come with you.

Some people find their faith a great comfort when someone close to them dies. If you have a faith, being actively involved with your local place of worship can help socially, emotionally and spiritually.

Volunteering can also be a great way to meet new people and stay connected, and you can help a cause that means something to you. Timings are often flexible, too – so you can start out doing what you feel able to and build on this over time if you want to.
Those around you

Often, you share the experience of bereavement with loved ones. Family dynamics can be tricky at times like this – but there can be lovely moments that you all share together, too.

Supporting loved ones
While everyone grieves in their own way, having people around you can be a great support – and you can be a great support to them, too. If possible, encourage your loved ones to share how they’re feeling and reassure them that they’re not alone. Talking, listening and sharing stories of the person you’ve lost can help you all start to accept the loss and begin to feel better.
Finding the right words
Talking to someone about your feelings can be easier said than done. And it often feels difficult to talk to someone who’s lost a person close to them – many people don’t know what to say, or worry that they’ll say the wrong thing and so avoid the topic altogether. That’s not to say they don’t want to offer support.

Sometimes it can be helpful to bring up what’s happened in conversation – this shows the other person that it’s OK to talk about it.

Talking to young children
Speaking to grandchildren or other young children about death can be difficult, especially if it’s the first time they’ve experienced a bereavement – but it’s important to talk, be open, and answer any questions they have. Try to encourage them to ask questions and answer them as honestly as you can, even if it’s difficult for you.

This might help
Organisations such as Winston’s Wish (page 30) offer support, information and guidance to people caring for a bereaved child or young person. Cruse Bereavement Care (page 28) runs an initiative called Hope Again, aimed at bereaved young people.
If you’ve been left alone

If someone close to you has died and you’re now alone, things can be particularly difficult. It might feel like you don’t have anyone to talk to about your emotions. You might feel lonely and isolated.

There are helplines you can call if you want to talk to someone – see pages 27-30 for details. You can also ask your doctor about what support services are available locally to help you cope.

If the person who’s died was someone you relied on day-to-day, then you might be struggling with things like cooking, shopping, or dealing with finances. If that’s the case, contact your local council about having a care needs assessment and explain what you need help with.

This might help

We have some other information guides which can point you in the right direction if you’ve been left alone and you’re worried about what to do:

• More money in your pocket
• Looking after your money
• Getting help at home
• Housing options
• Staying safe
If you’d like companionship, there might be things going on in your local area. Get in touch with your local community centre to see what’s available. Getting involved with some new activities can be a great way to meet people.

There are also befriending services available through local Age UKs – they can arrange for someone to visit you for a cup of tea and a chat. Age UK also runs a Telephone Friendship Service, which matches you with a new friend you can speak to regularly on the phone.

This might help

Search ‘telephone friendship’ on the Age UK website or call 0800 434 6105 to find out more about the Telephone Friendship Service. You need to be over 60 and meet eligibility criteria. In Northern Ireland, contact Age NI (page 27) to find out about the Check In and Chat telephone service.

Contact your local Age UK to find out about their befriending services. In Wales, speak to your local Age Cymru, or contact the Age Cymru Advice line (page 27).

You can also contact Cruse Bereavement Care (page 28) for help and support.
When Maria’s husband died, she found herself struggling to cope.

‘I started going to a day centre where I met other people. Some of them were in a similar situation to me.’

‘When my husband died two years ago, it felt like my whole world fell apart. We’d been married for over 50 years and I couldn’t imagine my life without him. He’d been ill for a while – but even though his death wasn’t unexpected, it still came as a huge shock to me. My daughters live abroad, so when they left after a couple of weeks I felt very alone.

‘I remembered seeing a sign in my library saying that my local Age UK offered a befriending service, and I thought it couldn’t hurt to contact them. So I got in touch – and they arranged for someone to chat to me each week.

‘Knowing someone was going to call made such a difference. And when I was feeling more confident, I started going to a day centre where I met other people. Some of them were in a similar situation to me. It was good to talk to them and realise that my feelings were normal.

‘Now I’m getting back on my feet, it’s my turn to help others. I’ve volunteered as a befriender and soon I’ll be going to see people who need a bit of comfort and support at a difficult time.’
Past bereavements

If you’ve lost someone close to you before, you might have expected to experience similar feelings again. But different losses can affect us in different ways. Some emotions may be stronger after the deaths of certain people – or you might experience emotions you haven’t felt before.

Bereavement can trigger memories of past losses, too, and you might find these unhappy times coming back to you particularly strongly. It might be that emotions weren’t as openly discussed at the time, or that your feelings as a child were overlooked. A miscarriage or the death a child may have been particularly hard to cope with at the time.

You might feel the need to mourn and talk about these losses before you can start to cope with your more recent bereavement. If you can, talk to friends and family about how you’re feeling. If you’d prefer to talk to a professional, you can see your doctor or a bereavement counsellor.

This might help

You can contact specialist organisations for more help. Sands (page 29) supports those who have lost a child during pregnancy or after birth. The Compassionate Friends (page 30) supports people who are affected by the death of a child of any age.

The armed forces charity SSAFA (page 29) specialises in helping those who have served or lost someone who served.
Looking ahead

It can be difficult to think about the future while you’re grieving, but there’s no rush – do everything at your own pace. Looking after yourself and talking about how you’re feeling can help you start to look ahead.

You might feel guilty at first – but finding enjoyment in life isn’t a betrayal of the person who’s died, or a substitution for the life you had with them. Life will never be quite the same again, but that doesn’t mean it can’t be lived to the full. Spend time with those close to you and do things you enjoy. It might be a good time to learn something new, take up a new hobby and make new friends.

Give yourself things to look forward to. You might not feel ready for this for a good while, but when you do, booking a day trip or a weekend away can give you a break from your day-to-day routine and remind you of what life still has to offer.

Birthdays, anniversaries or other dates that are significant to you and the person you’ve lost can be particularly difficult. You might find it helpful to consider how you’ll deal with them in advance. You might want to use them to celebrate the person’s memory with others – for example, by sharing stories or raising a toast – or you might prefer to have time on your own to remember them privately.

Most importantly, remind yourself that there’s no formula to grief and you may have strong and unexpected feelings. This is perfectly natural – losing someone can be the start of an incredibly emotional time, and everyone reacts differently. But if you do find yourself struggling to cope or if you’d like to talk to someone, there’s help and support available.
Useful organisations

Age UK
We provide advice and information for people in later life through our Age UK Advice line, publications and website.

Age UK Advice: 0800 169 65 65
Lines are open seven days a week from 8am to 7pm.
www.ageuk.org.uk

In Wales, contact Age Cymru Advice: 0300 303 44 98
www.agecymru.org.uk

In Northern Ireland, contact Age NI: 0808 808 7575
www.ageni.org

In Scotland, contact Age Scotland: 0800 124 4222
www.agescotland.org.uk
At a Loss
Website to help people find the right bereavement support services for them. You can filter results by the type of loss you’re experiencing, your age, and your location.
www.ataloss.org

C.A.L.L. Mental Health Helpline for Wales
Confidential support and listening service for mental health and related issues in Wales.
Tel: 0800 132 737 (or text ‘help’ to 81066)
www.callhelpline.org.uk

Cruse Bereavement Care
Charity that provides support to bereaved people across England, Wales and Northern Ireland. Services include a website, helpline and online chat function, as well as in-person support.
Tel: 0808 808 1677
www.cruse.org.uk

Department for Work and Pensions Bereavement Service
Government service that checks surviving relatives’ eligibility for benefits. It also takes claims for bereavement benefits and Funeral Payments.
Tel: 0800 731 0469
Textphone: 0800 731 0464

Drinkaware
Organisation offering tips on responsible drinking.
Tel: 020 7766 9900
Email: contact@drinkaware.co.uk
www.drinkaware.co.uk

Lifeline
Helpline service for people in distress and despair in Northern Ireland. It can also provide follow-up support, including counselling and complementary therapy.
Tel: 0808 808 8000
www.lifelinehelpline.info
Mind
Charity providing advice and support for anyone experiencing a mental health issue.
Tel: 0300 123 3393
Email: info@mind.org.uk
www.mind.org.uk

National Bereavement Service
Not-for-profit company offering straightforward information and guidance to people who have lost a loved one. It can guide you through the practical arrangements you need to make after a death, while offering emotional support.
Tel: 0800 0246 121
www.thenbs.org

Samaritans
Helpline offering confidential support to people in distress, 24 hours a day.
Tel: 116 123
Email: jo@samaritans.org
www.samaritans.org

Sands
Charity providing support to parents, grandparents and their families when a baby dies during pregnancy or after birth. You can get in touch at any time after the loss – even years later.
Tel: 0808 164 3332
Email: helpline@sands.org.uk
www.sands.org.uk

SSAFA, the Armed Forces Charity
Charity that offers support and advice to anyone who has served in the armed forces or who has lost someone who served.
Tel: 0800 260 6767
www.ssafa.org.uk
The Compassionate Friends
National self-help organisation through which parents who have been bereaved offer friendship and support to other bereaved parents, grandparents and their families.
Tel: 0345 123 2304
Email: helpline@tcf.org.uk
www.tcf.org.uk

The Good Grief Trust
Charity providing advice, support and directions to further resources to people affected by grief in the UK.
Email: hello@thegoodgrieftrust.org www.thegoodgrieftrust.org

Winston’s Wish
Charity offering support, information and guidance to people caring for a bereaved child or young person.
Tel: 08088 020 021
Email: ask@winstonswish.org
www.winstonswish.org
Help us be there for someone else

We hope you found this guide helpful. When times are tough, it’s so important to get some support. Did you know you could help us reach someone else who needs a little help? Here’s how:

1. Give your views on guides like this
   Our Readers’ Panel helps make sure the information we produce is right for older people and their families. We’d love you to join. Go to www.ageuk.org.uk/readers-panel.

2. Donate to us
   Every donation we receive helps us be there for someone when they need us. To make a donation, call us on 0800 169 8787 or go to www.ageuk.org.uk/donate.

3. Volunteer with us
   Our volunteers make an incredible difference to people’s lives. Get involved by contacting your local Age UK or at www.ageuk.org.uk/volunteer.

4. Campaign with us
   We campaign to make life better for older people, and rely on the help of our strong network of campaigners. Add your voice to our latest campaigns at www.ageuk.org.uk/campaigns.

5. Remember us in your will
   A gift to Age UK in your will is a very special way of helping older people get expert support in the years to come. Find out more by calling 020 3033 1421 or visit www.ageuk.org.uk/legacy.
What should I do now?

You may want to read some of our relevant information guides and factsheets, such as:

- When someone dies
- How to be an executor
- Your mind matters

You can order any of our guides or factsheets by giving our Advice Line a ring for free on 0800 169 65 65 (8am-7pm, 365 days a year).

Our friendly advisers are there to help answer any questions.

All of our publications are available in large print and audio formats.

There’s plenty of really useful information on our website, too. Visit www.ageuk.org.uk/moneymatters to get started.

If contact details for your local Age UK are not in the below box, call Age UK Advice free on 0800 169 65 65.