Equity release
Deciding whether equity release is right for you
Information and advice you need to help you love later life.

We’re Age UK and our goal is to enable older people to love later life.

We are passionate about affirming that your later years can be fulfilling years. Whether you’re enjoying your later life or going through tough times, we’re here to help you make the best of your life.

Our network includes Age Cymru, Age NI, Age Scotland, Age International and more than 130 local partners.

What this guide is about

As we get older, we often start to think about how we’ll manage financially, especially if we have a low income and limited savings. If you own your home in the UK and are aged 55 or over, you may be considering equity release as a way of accessing some of the value of your home without having to move.

Equity release is a big decision and it might not be the best or only solution. If you’re considering equity release, this guide will provide you with some basic information about how it works, where to get advice and if it might be right for you.

Before making any decision about equity release, it’s important to get financial advice. If you decide to go ahead with equity release, you’ll also need legal advice during the process.

As far as possible, the information in this guide is applicable across the UK.

Key

This symbol indicates where information differs for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.
What is equity release?

Equity release is a way of releasing cash from your home without having to move. The older you are, the more you can release. There are two main types of equity release.

• Lifetime mortgage. This is the most common type of equity release. You borrow money secured against your home. The mortgage is usually repaid from the sale of your home when you die or move permanently into residential care.

• Home reversion plan. You raise money by selling all or part of your home while continuing to live in it until you die or move into permanent residential care.

• See pages 8-11 for more information about these types of equity release, including possible advantages and disadvantages.

Equity release is a big decision and it might not be the best or only solution.
Who can choose equity release?

For a lifetime mortgage you (or both of you, if you’re borrowing jointly) need to be at least 55 years old. For a home reversion plan you (or both of you, if you’re taking out a plan jointly) need to be at least 65 years old.

You must own property in the UK, which must be your main residence.

Your property must be in reasonable condition and over a certain value, and there may also be restrictions on the type of property accepted. Specific criteria may vary between equity release providers.

If you have a mortgage or secured loan on your property you may still qualify for equity release, but it will depend on the value of your home and the amount outstanding on the existing mortgage or loan. Any outstanding mortgages or loans secured against your home will have to be cleared at the same time as taking equity release, either by using some of the money to be released or by other arrangements, such as savings.

Equity release may not be suitable if you have dependants living with you. Any dependants should take separate legal advice. If they wish to remain living with you in the property, they may need to sign a waiver confirming that they understand they don’t have the right to reside there if you die or move into permanent residential care.
There are two main types of equity release: lifetime mortgages and home reversion plans.
What are your other options?

Equity release is a big decision and you should consider all your options first. Start by thinking about other ways to raise money. Options include:

• Other investments or assets that could boost your income or give you the lump sum you need. A financial adviser should be able to look at all your options.

• Moving to a smaller or less expensive property.

• Renting out a room in your home. Bear in mind you may have to pay tax on rental income over a certain threshold and your entitlement to benefits and care funded by the local council may be affected.

• Getting help with repairs, improvements or adaptations from your local council or another body such as a charity or Home Improvement Agency (HIA). Contact Foundations, the national body for HIAs, (page 21) or your local council. In Wales, contact your local Age Cymru to find out if there’s a handyperson or HandyVan scheme in your area (page 19) or contact Care and Repair Cymru (page 21). In Scotland, contact Care and Repair Scotland (page 21). In Northern Ireland check with Age NI for local availability of Handyperson schemes (page 19).

• Getting financial support from family and friends.

• Applying for state benefits. You can arrange a benefits check at your local Age UK or use our online benefits calculator at www.ageuk.org.uk/benefitscheck to see whether you’re entitled to any benefits.
Other things to consider include:

• If you receive state benefits, how will releasing equity affect your benefits?
• If your circumstances change, will it affect your ability to move?
• If you have children, how will they feel about it? You may want to discuss it with them first, although the final decision is yours.
• Will releasing equity affect whether you pay for care or the amount you pay?

If you’re having difficulty meeting your monthly mortgage payments, you should contact your mortgage lender for help and to talk through your options. Your lender should make reasonable attempts to reach an agreement with you. If you have an interest-only mortgage coming to an end which you are struggling to pay off, contact an advice agency.

Before making any decision about equity release, you should get financial advice. If you decide to go ahead with equity release, you’ll also need legal advice during the process. See page 17 for more information on seeking financial and legal advice.

Different types of equity release

There are two main types of equity release: lifetime mortgages and home reversion plans.

Lifetime mortgage

- This is a type of loan secured against your home. It allows you to release a tax-free cash lump sum from the value of your property. The maximum loan depends on your age and the value of your property and, in some cases, your health.
- You continue to live in and keep ownership of your home.
- You remain responsible for maintaining and running your home and for insuring the building, just as you were before taking out the lifetime mortgage.
- Typically, the mortgage does not need to be repaid until the last borrower dies or moves into permanent residential care.
- Interest will be added to the loan (increasing the amount you owe and reducing the amount of equity you have in your property), but this is usually ‘rolled up’ until the loan is repaid. This means you don’t have to make regular interest payments, but you will end up paying interest on the interest. The amount you owe can grow very quickly in this way. However, there are products available where you can repay all of the interest so the amount you owe doesn’t increase.
- Always look for a ‘no negative equity guarantee’ from lifetime mortgage providers. This guarantee means that, when the property is sold after you die or move into permanent residential care, you or your estate will not have to repay more than the sale proceeds, even if they are less than the amount owed. Your estate is everything you own, including money, property, possessions and investments.
Advantages of a lifetime mortgage:
• You can get a tax-free lump sum and/or smaller, regular payments to supplement your income, and can continue to live in your home until you die or move into permanent residential care.
• You may continue to benefit from any rise in the value of your property. Remember, the amount you owe may also go up because of interest charges applied to lifetime mortgages, so your equity may not increase.
• You are still able to move home and the product can be transferred to a new home, as long as your new property can act as acceptable security to the mortgage provider. If your new property is worth less than your old home, you may have to repay some of the outstanding mortgage.
• On most products, there is no need to make regular repayments.

Disadvantages of a lifetime mortgage:
• It will reduce the value of your estate and the amount that will go to the people named as beneficiaries in your will.
• If you decide to repay the product early, for example if you get an unexpected windfall, there could be a substantial early repayment charge. Your adviser should explain this to you when you take out the mortgage.
• Getting a lump sum or taking extra cash to supplement your income may reduce your entitlement to means-tested benefits, now or in the future (see page 14). If you get care at home funded fully or partially by the local council, they may start charging you or ask you to pay more.
• If the value of your home falls, your remaining equity will also be reduced.
Home reversion plans

• You sell all or part of your home to a home reversion company in return for a tax-free lump sum or a smaller sum with subsequent payments.

• You no longer own your home, or you only own a part-share of it. But you receive a lease giving you the right to live there rent-free (or sometimes paying a token rent) for your lifetime, or until you have to move into permanent residential care. Your solicitor should check the terms of the lease and explain them to you, so that you understand them and know what to expect.

• The reversion company will take their percentage share of the sales proceeds when the property is sold (usually, after the last borrower dies or moves into permanent residential care). For example, if you sold 50% of your property to a reversion company, they will receive 50% of the sale proceeds.

• The reversion company will only pay you a percentage of the current market value of your property because it has to account for the fact that you will be living there rent-free (or almost) for the rest of your life and it may have to wait years for its monetary return.

• You remain responsible for maintaining and running your home and for insuring the building, just as you were before taking out the plan.

Advantages of a home reversion plan:

• You can get a tax-free lump sum and/or take cash to supplement your income, and you can continue to live in your home rent-free (or with minimal rent) until you die or move into permanent residential care.

• If you haven’t sold 100% of your property, you, or your estate, will continue to benefit from any rise in its value.
• You can usually release higher amounts than through a lifetime mortgage.

• You can still move to a suitable alternative property in the future, as the plan is transferable. It will be subject to your new home meeting the property suitability criteria applicable at the time.

Disadvantages of a home reversion plan:

• It will reduce the value of your estate and the amount that will go to the people named as beneficiaries in your will.

• The reversion company owns all or a part-share of your home.

• Your entitlement to means-tested state benefits may be affected, now or in the future (see page 14). If you get care at home funded fully or partially by the local council, they may start charging you or ask you to pay more.

• You will receive less than full market value if you sell some or all of your property through a home reversion plan.

• If you die or move into permanent residential care soon after taking out a reversion plan, you could have effectively sold off your home (or a part of it) cheaply – although some plans give your family a rebate if you die within the first few years of signing up.

• Home reversion plans can be repaid, but the property would need to be bought back from the reversion company at the full market value.

To do next

If you’re considering equity release, talk to a specialist equity release adviser, who will review your personal circumstances and see if there are any possible alternatives. If equity release is the right option, they’ll provide a recommendation of the type that best suits your requirements. See page 17 for information on finding an adviser.
Frequently asked questions

Here are some questions you might have about equity release

“Will I lose out on state benefits if I release equity?”

If you receive any means-tested benefits they may be reduced or lost entirely. This will depend on your circumstances and the type of equity release that you choose.

“Can I move house in the future?”

You may be able to transfer your equity release product, as long as your new property can act as acceptable security to the provider. Leasehold retirement housing may not be acceptable.
It will depend on the value of your home and the amount outstanding on the existing mortgage, which will have to be cleared at the same time as taking equity release.

Products that meet the Equity Release Council’s standards assure that if you die or move into permanent residential care, you or your estate will not repay more than the sale proceeds.

Yes, but they may not have the right to stay living there if you die or move into permanent residential care. They will have to sign a waiver confirming they understand this.
How will equity release affect your benefits and tax position?

You need to consider the impact on any benefits that you receive when you release equity, and be aware of the possible impact on any benefits that you may want to claim in the future.

If you receive any means-tested benefits, they may be reduced or lost entirely. These include:

• Pension Credit
• Jobseeker’s Allowance
• Income Support
• income-related Employment and Support Allowance
• Universal Credit
• support with Council Tax or care services

This will depend on your circumstances and the type of equity release you choose.

A specialist equity release adviser will be able to work out what could happen to your benefits if you take out equity release. Consider this information carefully.

The equity you release will be tax-free. Any income you raise from investing the money may increase the amount of income tax you have to pay, though many providers won’t lend money to be used for investment.

For more information
See our factsheet Equity release for examples of how equity release can affect your benefits.
Avoiding risk

All firms advising on or selling equity release have to be regulated by the Financial Conduct Authority (FCA, page 20). This provides protection, security and access to the Financial Services Compensation Scheme if you ever need it.

You should choose a product from a company that is a member of the Equity Release Council (page 20). This is an industry body and its members agree to abide by a voluntary code of conduct. This includes certain product standards. When these standards are met it means you:

• can live in your property for life, or until you move into permanent residential care
• can move your plan to an alternative property (providing it is acceptable to the equity release product provider)
• will never owe more than the value of your home when it is sold after you die or move into permanent residential care.

Always make sure you speak to a specialist equity release adviser, and that both the adviser and the equity release provider are authorised by the FCA (page 20).

If something goes wrong with your plan, contact your provider first. They will have a complaints procedure to follow. If you’re not satisfied with the response, you can contact the Financial Ombudsman Service (page 20) to see if they can help.
Alternatives to be aware of

You might see other options that could provide you with money from your property.

Sale and rent back
With this arrangement, a firm buys your house for less than market value and rents it back to you at a market rent.

Unlike equity release, you can lose your home. You also have to pay rent, which can later be increased significantly. There are specific Housing Benefit rules about paying rent for a property that you used to own.

Be cautious before agreeing to such an arrangement, and take independent legal advice. If you’re considering sale and rent back, make sure that the provider is authorised and regulated by the FCA (page 20).

Lifetime lease plans
You can purchase the right to live in a property for the rest of your life under a lifetime lease plan. This isn’t a mortgage, loan or equity release. Instead, you buy a lifetime lease from a company, who would then own the property when you die or move into permanent residential care. Take independent legal advice if you’re considering this.

Part-exchange
Some developers allow you to part-exchange your existing property for a retirement home. This enables you to move without the hassle of selling your property, but the developer takes a percentage of its value.

For more information
See our factsheet Equity release, read the Money Advice Service’s guide Sale and rent back schemes or contact the Money Advice Service (page 22).
Seeking legal and financial advice

Always get advice from a specialist equity release adviser before taking out equity release and make sure the financial adviser you choose is authorised by the FCA.

You can search for a financial adviser through:

• the Money Advice Service’s retirement adviser directory (page 22)
• the Equity Release Council (page 20)
• the Personal Finance Society (page 22)

As part of the process, you will need to appoint an independent solicitor who has equity release knowledge. The Equity Release Council (page 20) or the relevant Law Society (page 21) in your nation can provide you with a list of local solicitors.
Before making any decision about equity release, it’s important to get financial advice.
