Everyone should live with dignity and respect. Older people are equal members of society and should not be subjected to ageist attitudes, stereotyping or conduct. Human rights standards provide vital protection for older people by helping to change practice and procedure, culture and attitudes, and offering redress when breaches of human rights have taken place.

Government at all levels should take a strategic approach to making the UK a great place to grow older where everyone is able to have a say in decisions that affect their lives. In reshaping public services, Government at all levels should take account of the needs of an ageing population.

All older people should have choice and control over their own lives, with easy access to the information and advice they need to make that happen.

Money matters

Financial inclusion

Older consumers should have safe, convenient and affordable access to financial services. They should be able to expect appropriate protection and fair treatment.

Health and wellbeing

Carers

Carers must not be expected to sacrifice their health and quality of life. Society should recognise carers’ contribution, and ensure that they are supported to be able to live fulfilling lives whilst continuing in their caring role.

Health, wellbeing and prevention

Efforts to improve public health must be seen as just as important to older age groups as to other age groups. Preventing poor health and health crises in older people should be an essential objective for health and care services.

Care and support

Age-friendly health services

Older people must be able to access health services that do not discriminate and are equipped to provide safe, high quality care that’s relevant to them; and be treated by people that fully understand their needs and aspirations.

Care homes

Care home residents must be full members of society, able to maintain their personal identity and contacts with family and community, with rights to security of tenure and the protection of the Human Rights Act, and protection against poor care and abuse.

Dignity in health and social care

At all times, older people using health and care services must be treated and cared for with dignity and respect.

End of life care

Everyone has the right to expect services and support that help them to achieve a dignified and pain-free death, with choice in how they are cared for in their final months and days, regardless of where they live or their diagnosis.

Housing and homes

Age-friendly neighbourhoods

Everybody should be able to live in an age-friendly environment, that enables people of all ages to lead independent and fulfilling lives.

Active communities

Digital inclusion

Older people should be supported and encouraged to get online but those who cannot or do not want to do so should continue to be able to access services and support in a way suits them.

Employment

Older people who want to work must have the opportunity to do so. Someone’s age alone should play no part in judging whether they are capable or able to do any job.

Energy

Everyone should be able to live in a warm, energy efficient home and the energy market should work in the interests of consumers.

For more detail on our policy positions, visit ageuk.org.uk/our-impact/policy-research/policy-positions/, where you can also sign up to our Policy and Research update. Alternatively email policy@ageuk.org.uk or phone 0800 169 2081. For Media queries, email media@ageuk.org.uk
Taxation
The tax system should be fair; demands must be affordable but the taxation system should also ensure that people do not feel penalised for having saved.

Mental capacity
People must be supported in making as many decisions for themselves as possible, and where they are unable to do so, decisions must be made in that person’s best interests.

Nutrition and hydration
Good nutrition and hydration benefit older people. Well-nourished people are more likely to remain healthy and independent for longer.

Tackling loneliness and isolation
Older people should have opportunities to make and maintain friends and connections so that they can enjoy life, as much as possible, for as long as possible.

Social care assessment and eligibility
Older people must have a right to full consideration of their individual care and support needs. A transparent national system must ensure that no one is left without the support needed to have a good quality of life and provide the clarity needed to help people plan for the future.

Social care funding
The care and support system must be funded at a level that ensures that everyone who needs it is able to obtain safe, high quality care and support that enables them to live a fulfilling life.

Adult safeguarding
The abuse and neglect of older people remains a largely hidden issue, which leaves hundreds of thousands of older people experiencing, or at risk of, avoidable harm.

Telehealth and telecare
Older people should be able to choose well-designed telecare and telehealth systems which help them and, where relevant, their carers, better manage their health and maintain their independence, dignity and wellbeing.

Housing design, adaptations and support
New and existing homes need to be adaptable to the changing needs of an ageing population to promote both independence and self-determination.

Older homelessness
No older person should find themselves homeless, either living in unsuitable temporary accommodation or sleeping rough on the streets.

Older prisoners
Older prisoners should be held in establishments that meet their basic needs, receive the same level of basic health and social care as non-prisoners, and receive adequate support on release.

Social care funding
The care and support system must ensure that no one is left without the support needed to have a good quality of life and provide the clarity needed to help people plan for the future.

Social care assessment and eligibility
Older people must have a right to full consideration of their individual care and support needs. A transparent national system must ensure that no one is left without the support needed to have a good quality of life and provide the clarity needed to help people plan for the future.

Local public transport/Older drivers
Wherever they live, older people should be able to reach key services, friends and family at reasonable cost, in reasonable time and with reasonable ease.

Retirement housing
Older people should have access to a range of different housing options that match their individual needs and aspirations.

Rural ageing
Older people should have the opportunity to learn, join in, volunteer or work.

Volunteering and active citizenship
Everyone should have the opportunity to learn, join in, volunteer or work.

Learning and skills
Meaningful opportunities to learn for both work and pleasure should be available to people of all ages. Publicly and privately funded provision should not be inaccessible to people just because of their date of birth.

Private Pensions/State Pensions/ Poverty and financial disadvantage
All current and future pensioners should have enough money from state and private sources to live comfortably and participate fully in society.

Living well with dementia
Every person with dementia should be supported to live well and to continue participating in society. They and their carers should have access to good-quality care and support from diagnosis to the end of life, wherever they live and whatever their background.

Health and care integration
Older people must be able to expect public services to work together to meet their health and care needs and take account of their circumstances. Health and care integration should enable older people and their carers to achieve greater control over their health and wellbeing and maintain their independence.